Caux-sur-Montreux, Switzerland (by cable) September 14th.

For the first time in Europe the anthem of the Bantu people Nkosi Sikeleli Africa was sung by a chorus from ten nations at the World Assembly for Moral Re-Armament here. The entire Assembly stood in tribute to the African people. The anthem was introduced by Mr. John Ngcobo, the Zulu concert singer, who told how he had rejected an invitation to the East Berlin Communist Youth Rally to bring the song to Caux.

Mr. Bremer Hofmeyr of South Africa rose at the end of the anthem. He said, "This has moved me more deeply than anything else I know. It is the anthem of the African peoples and of the tremendous longing of a continent to know the voice of God. When black and white can learn to know God's voice that is real democracy. Africa today is offered both organised materialism of the East and the disorganised materialism of the West. Moral Re-Armament is the answer to both."

"Caux is the great spiritual parliament of the nations from which the moral leadership of the world is coming," said Mr. Arthur Baker, Chief of the London Times Parliamentary Staff.

Baker spoke of the "spectacle of a nation divided against itself". He saw in his country "this division which is not only political and economic, reflected in the war of ideas which runs right through the nation. On one hand there are men living on the basis of absolute moral standards and on the other, men living on a materialistic basis. More and more leaders of my country are turning to Moral Re-Armament for the moral leadership the country needs. In the hot spots of this ideological war, areas like the docks of Liverpool and London where subversive forces are concentrating, Moral Re-Armament is winning the battle."
