WORLD JOHANNESBURG

Vundla, back from overseas tour, says —

'RACIAL GROUPS IN S.A. MUST FIGHT FOR RIGHT — NOT WHO IS RIGHT'

"SOUTH AFRICA is part of Africa, and Africa is part of the world," said Mr. P. Q. Vundla, leader of civic affairs in the Western Township for 18 years, when interviewed on his return to Johannesburg after a three-month tour of Europe and the United States.

There are Europeans who have no other home. They are in fact, Africans. Some Europeans, it is true, are more advanced than Africans. Thus, for the time being, they have a material advantage.

But they must always remember that they were never meant to take advantage of any weakness in other people. Their mission was — and still is — to serve the Africans

Happy country

I genuinely believe that South Africa could still be a happy country if all racial groups came together to fight for what is right — not who is right. Only on that basis can we save Africa and the world.

The real trouble in this country is not colour but character. We have got to make a man fit to govern the country above party and above colour.

All this will happen only when we have restored God's guidance in the leadership of our nation.

During my travel overseas, I discovered that, despite the lessons we should have learned from the two world wars, there could be yet another world war.

"There are people who think that their ideas are right and that other people's ideas wrong.

"When you rely on human wisdom and are disappointed, you become frustrated and bitter. And it is this bitterness and frustration which threaten peace.

Mr. Vundla forecasted that millions of Africans will achieve political freedom in 1960.

He added: "This will be a good thing indeed. But it must be remembered that freedom involves responsibility.

"Some people were inclined to be irresponsible because of frustration.

Statesmanship

"You cannot be responsible without getting, first, the answer to bitterness, hatred, superiority and arrogance.

"It is only the statesmanship of the humble heart that will do the trick. We must live the four moral standards of absolute honesty, absolute purity, absolute unselfishness and absolute love."

Mr. Vundla said people overseas did not understand that there could be discrimination purely on the ground of colour.

Among thousands of people met by Mr. and Mrs Vundla were Dr. Frank Buchman, the founder of the Moral Rearmament movement.

Mr. Vundla expressed the opinion that Dr. Buchman is different from other men.

Mr. Vundla, who was accompanied by his wife, was given a warm welcome in London at South Africa House. He had a word with Dr. van Rhijn, South African High Commissioner in Britain.

In America

In America Mr. Vundla met congressmen and senior officials in the state departments. He also had a long talk with Armstrong, now a religious worker, but once holder of three world boxing titles — feather, light and welter-weight.

While in Germany, the Vundlas met three South African students Messrs Kadalie, Denalane and Dube.

Mr. Vundla was struck by the large numbers of West African students in big universities overseas. He said the universities in Europe, England and United States were 'teeming with West Africans'.

During his trip, Mr. Vundla addressing gatherings organised by Moral Rearmament in almost all the big cities which he and his wife visited.
