Racial friction — in U.K.

LONDON—Conrad Hunte, a former West Indies cricket vice-captain, said he thought racial relations in Britain had rapidly deteriorated in the past two years.

Mr. Hunte, who has played in Lancashire League cricket, told a Moral Rearmament Movement Press conference: "the immigrant feels he is being discriminated against.

"On the British side, there is a feeling they don't want to get involved.

"The question is not one of economics but of character.

"You taught us to play cricket, since then we have taught you how to win.

"Why can't we teach Britain to recover her honour and prestige?" — SAPA-Reuter.
